Subject: Guns across state lines

Hi Rich,

I'm looking for some clarity on what the laws would be if a New York resident were to buy a weapon or ammunition out of state, and bring it back to New York.

What would the gun owner need to do if they bought the following in Pennsylvania then brought it back into New York...
...If they bought ammunition (both now and when the background check clause kicks in). Also, is there a limit to how much ammunition they can carry across state lines?
...If they bought a firearm that is allowed here?
...If they bought something now classified as an assault weapon and brought it back into the state?
...If they bought something now illegal in New York but not elsewhere, such as a 15-round magazine?

The Monroe County Clerk is responding to this Buffalo News article, <http://www.buffalonews.com/apps/pbcs.dll/article?AID=/20130415/CITYANDREGION/130419404/1010> where Joseph D'Amico said the county clerk bears some responsibility in determining if an individual is a threat.

To them, they feel as if they're being told that it's their job to make sure that they are revoking the pistol permit of the right person once given a name, and she feels that's the burden of the state.

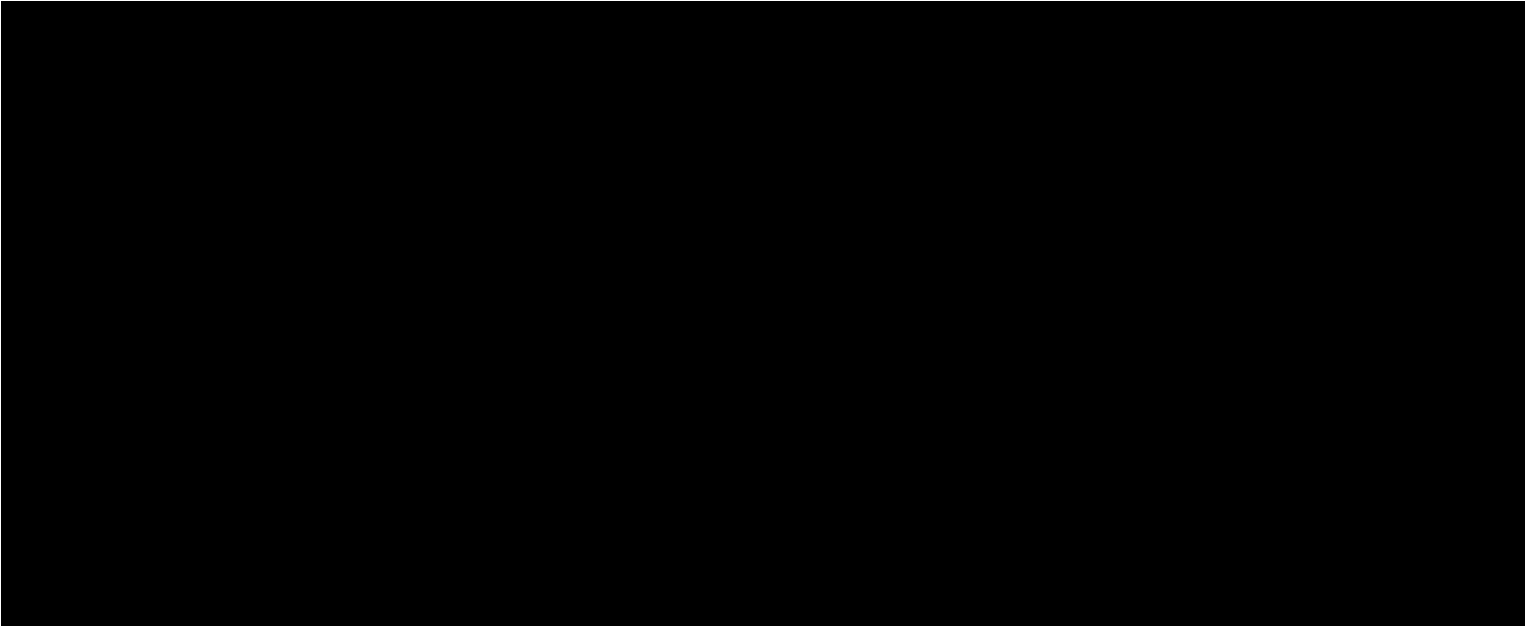

Can you respond? I'll also reach out to the state police.
